The Hayes Family: Chemical Missionaries

Ryan and Suzi Hayes are on a mission to help people of all ages see that God has chemically designed our planet for life, and we are not here by chance or evolution. There are two aspects to their chemical missionary work. The first is to show God's chemical design in the air, land, water, and in living systems. Dr. Hayes presents an engaging set of talks for week-long, weekend, or single events that teach how chemical systems have been designed to support life on Earth. Secondly, Dr. Hayes and his family work together to provide chemical demonstrations for camps, churches, schools, youth rallies, and science fairs that teach us about God's amazing love for us.

Dr. Ryan Hayes is a Professor of Chemistry at Andrews University who teaches General Chemistry and Analytical Chemistry. He has worked in the chemical industry for almost 10 years and at Andrews University for another 12 years. He did his graduate work at Northwestern University in Evanston, IL. Suzi is a microbiologist working from home over the past 13 years to get their three kids off to a good start. She has worked in the science industry for about seven years before working full time at the Hayes Household. They have three awesome kids: Carter, Christiana, and Candance that help to safely present the chemical demonstrations. You may visit their website at:
